Brethren:

Masons owe certain duties of Brotherly Love and Fellowship to each other, the practice of which, as the distinguishing principles of our order are inculcated by the Master in the most impressive manner.

First, indolence should not cause our footsteps to halt, or wrath turn them aside, but with eager alacrity and swiftness of foot, we should press forward in the exercise of charity and kindness to a distressed fellow creature.

Secondly, In our devotion to Almighty God, we should remember a brother's welfare as our own, for the prayers of a fervent and sincere heart will find no less favour in the sight of heaven, because the petition for self is mingled with aspirations of benevolence for a freind.

Thirdly, when a brother intrusts to our keeping the secret thoughts of his bosom, prudence and fidelity should place a sacred seal upon our lips, least, in an unguarded moment, we betray the solem trust confided to our honor.

Fourthly, when adversity has visited our brother, and his calamities call for our aid, we should cheerfully and liberally stretch forth the hand of kindness, to save him from sinking, and to relieve his necessities.

Fifthly, while with candour and kindness we should admonish a brother of his faults, we should never revile his characted behind his back, but rather, when attacked by others, support and defend it.

Sincerely and Fraternally,

RICHARD A. JERVIS
Worshipful Master
