Dear Brethern:

Thru our degrees in Masonry we are taught that a true Mason is considerate, compassionate and concerned as to the needs of others. He is committed toward good will to all mankind.

These teachings take place within our respective lodges and it is hoped that they are practiced in our personal and social lives.

Our positive action and determination in carrying out what we have been taught in our degrees can only result in the feeling of fulfillment to the needs of others and the fulfillment of our obligations as Masons.

Masonry seeks to build character in men and to cultivate their best moral qualities. The practice of what we are taught and the cultivation of our moral qualities will tend to convince the world that Masons do care and are ready to become involved.

We never get so rich that we can afford to lose a friend.

WILLIAM C. PARR, JR., Worshipful Master
