March 1986

Dear Brethren:

"Freemasonry not withstanding has still survived".

Think about that statement for a minute Brethren. In the midst of all the scientific, technological and other advances that are occurring all around us, Freemasonry has still survived. Could it be that something in a man's basic nature still searches for something that doesn't change? Something that only demands of him that he be a good man and true and to obey the moral law, and afford him the opportunity to be a part of a very old tradition, that of being a Mason.

How many times have we all thought of "The Old Days" in our own lives? Masonry ties us to the past as nothing else can do. It enriches us and enables us to live and grow as Brothers in peace and harmony. Isn't it nice to be in lodge and be a part of something that has survived for so long a time?

In the far, far future, brethren will be in lodge and they will witness the same things we have, as we are witnessing what our ancient brethren did. Freemasonry will continue to answer man's search for something that won't change. It is up to us to keep building our fraternity, to preserve and protect it, and to pass it on to the future generations as we received it, unchanged.

Fraternally,

MARVIN WHITE, Worshipful Master
